Liquor Bill Passes Senate.

The Senate Monday night by a viva voce vote passed the Webb Liquor Bill, already passed by the House as a substitute for the Kenyon-Sheppard bill.

The Webb bill would prohibit shipments of intoxicating liquors from one State to another when intended to be received or sold in violation of the law of the state to which the shipment is made.

The House concurred in the Senate bill Tuesday, which differs from the bill passed by the House only in number. A report that President Taft will veto the measure created a stir among Democratic Senators and Congressmen.

The friends of the measure are worried because they fear that it will be impossible to pass the bill over the President's veto. This means, of course, that the question would be revived and injected into the Wilson administration. It is believed that two thirds of the House would vote to override the President's veto of this measure, but there is small chance that the sentiment in the Senate is strong enough to accomplish this end.

If the President vetoes the bill it will be on constitutional grounds. He is said to share the views of those, including the Kentucky members, who took that position.

In the Senate debate Senators Sutherland and Root, both noted constitutional lawyers, took the same view in opposing the bill as that of Senator Paynter in his speech attacking the bill.

The President is said to believe the measure unquestionably is unconstitutional, and that its passage by Congress simply shifts the burden of responsibility for its final defeat from the shoulders of politicians in the Supreme Court.

The substitution of the Webb bill for the Kenyon-Sheppard bill came at the close of a prolonged debate, and was by viva voce vote, no recall being demanded.

Patriotism.

A quaint little incident is related by a French war correspondent, which sheds light on the enthusiasm and nervousness with which the Greeks entered upon their war with Turkey. When the mobilization orders reached the little town of Chalkis, all owners of horses and mules hastened to comply, but there were no soldiers to escort the animals to Athens, where they were urgently needed, the military being already on the frontier. Thereupon the mayor of Chalkis set an example, which was followed by two or three of the oldest lawyers, school teachers, doctors and hotel keepers. All these notable and learned men put their dignity on one side, and turned themselves for the nonce into grooms and stable lads. After two days' journeying they gravely marched in procession through the principal streets of Athens, leading their beasts, and nobody laughed, which, indeed, there was no reason to do.

All the Difference.

A tale is being told on a certain railroad division about one of its conductors—that is, they tell it when he isn't around—something like this: At a station, which is a near-city one, a young lady got aboard the train, and the car being crowded, sat with another lady earlier aboard. When the "con" came around she smiled and bowed, and he returned her greeting politely, but in a distant fashion. A second time Miss Young Lady tried the gushing act with no luck. Then she complained to her seatmate. "I can't imagine what's the matter with Conductor Blank. We've always been such good friends, and today he hardly seems to know me!" "Perhaps it is because you are sitting with me," said the other lady. "Oh, I hardly think that could make any difference," objected the flirtatious one. "I don't really see how—" "It might, easily, I think; you see, I'm his wife!"

Hero in Humble Life.

A pathetic case of a dying man's forgetfulness of self occurred the other day at the village of Old Colwyn, North Wales. A sewer was being built when a portion of the trench collapsed. Two men were buried under the earth. The surveying staff, four doctors, and some others were quickly at work, and hearing the faint cries of the entombed men labored heroically to remove the heavy mass of soil in time to save life. An elderly man named Lloyd was first pulled out, and between the gasps he was heard to say: "Never mind me, boy. Look after the other man." He died while the rescue work was still going on. After arduous labor the second man, Morris Edwards, was reached and taken to the hospital.

Pertinent.

It is the fashion in England to attach to houses names that in many instances are absurd or misleading—as "Applecot," where the only trees are fir; but, as this London Chronicle story shows, fitness and humor sometimes govern the choice. A retired Indian civil servant, on his return to England, yielded to his wife's importunities, and said that she might have a new house. "But mind," he emphasized, "it must not cost above three thousand pounds." It cost double that amount, as houses have a way of doing, and when it came time to name the place, the owner had considerable fine masculine feeling to put into it; so, not wholly in memory of India, he called it: "Mysore Place."

Daily Thought.

The domain of beauty is more extensive than the domain of the physical world exposed to our view; it has no pounds but those of entire nature, and of the soul and genius of man.
